

Vladimír Naxera, Ph.D. (1986) is an Assistant Professor on the Department of Politics and International Relations at University of West Bohemia. His dissertation thesis was focused on corruption and its perception in the post-Communist Czech Republic. His current field of interest lies in the instrumental politicization of history and field research of public political ceremonies and their role in the processes of re/enactment of specific form of discourses. He also deals with political populism, politics in Central Europe, contemporary Russian society, Russian Orthodox Church and (geo)politics.